A Dangerous Lunatic.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The President has made the following appointments:

Henry W. Dinson, interpreter to consulate of United States, at Kaniagawa, Japan; Geo. B. Chamberlain, Supervisor of the Internal Revenue; Thos. Mitchell, of Illinois, agent for the Indians of the North River Agency, Montana; Wilburn Bagley, of Oregon, agent for Indians of Stillitz's Agency in Oregon, vice Jas. H. Fairchild, resigned; Jas. H. General Butler, in a conversation with prominent New York politicians, said he considered the result of the election in Ohio as a victory for the opponents of a forced resumption, and that he believed if the school question had not been raised Allen would have carried the State by a large majority. He thinks the moral effect of the Republican victory in Ohio will carry Pennsylvania for the Republicans.

An insane colored man named George Pice made his appearance at the President's house yesterday morning about 10:30 o'clock, and demanded to see the President, stating that he had been discharged from the penitentiary at Baltimore, where he had been unjustly incarcerated, and that the President was his father, and he wanted him to avenge his wrongs. Officer Kearney, on duty at the White House, arrested him and conveyed him to the police headquarters, where he insisted that he knew, by signs received, that the President was his father. Upon searching him a five-barreled revolver, loaded in every chamber, was found upon him.

New York.
Cruise of the Pandora.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—A London special to the Herald gives some interesting details of the cruise of the Pandora to the Arctic Regions, for the purpose of securing dispatches from the British expedition under Captain Nares.

The steamer crossed the much-dreaded Melville bay without encountering any ice. They were disappointed in not finding Captain Nares' dispatches at Corry island, and so they steered on to Lancaster sound. There they encountered giant ice-floes, and navigated with much difficulty. On reaching Barrow straits, they were enveloped in an impenetrable fog. At length Berry island was reached, August 12, and a strange discovery was made. They found the yacht Mary, which had been drawn up on the beach by Captain Ross, in 1850, still standing with her masts upright. Tracks of bears were found. The head-boards over the graves of Sir John Franklin's men were still in good preservation.

The Pandora then sailed for Peel Strait, and was lost on the voyage by vast fields of ice. She passed the furthest point, reaching McClintock's expedition, and reaching King William's land, thus navigating a sea never sailed by any other vessel before, except perhaps Franklin's. She then steamed down the west coast of the Arctic Ocean, here the delightful weather, a soft refreshing atmosphere and open expanse of water, with warm air currents were enjoyed.

The officers were intensely excited and expected important results; many believed they would discover traces of Franklin's expedition and were hopeful that Sir John Franklin's papers would be found and they would eventually make bearing straits, but in this they were disappointed. They encountered a solid ice field at Rannquette island which effectually blocked the vessel's further progress. They stayed there until September 7th, and then set out on their return voyage.

The return voyage was full of difficulties, and many exciting scenes and narrow escapes were experienced. At length she reached Corry Islands in safety, where they found the long looked for dispatches from Captain Nares, and the British Admiralty; these were brought home to England.
